

A schematic diagram of a light microscope. A light source (2) emits light that passes through a specimen (1). The light is then collected by an objective lens (3) and an eyepiece lens (4). The diagram shows the light path as a series of lines converging and diverging through the lenses.

